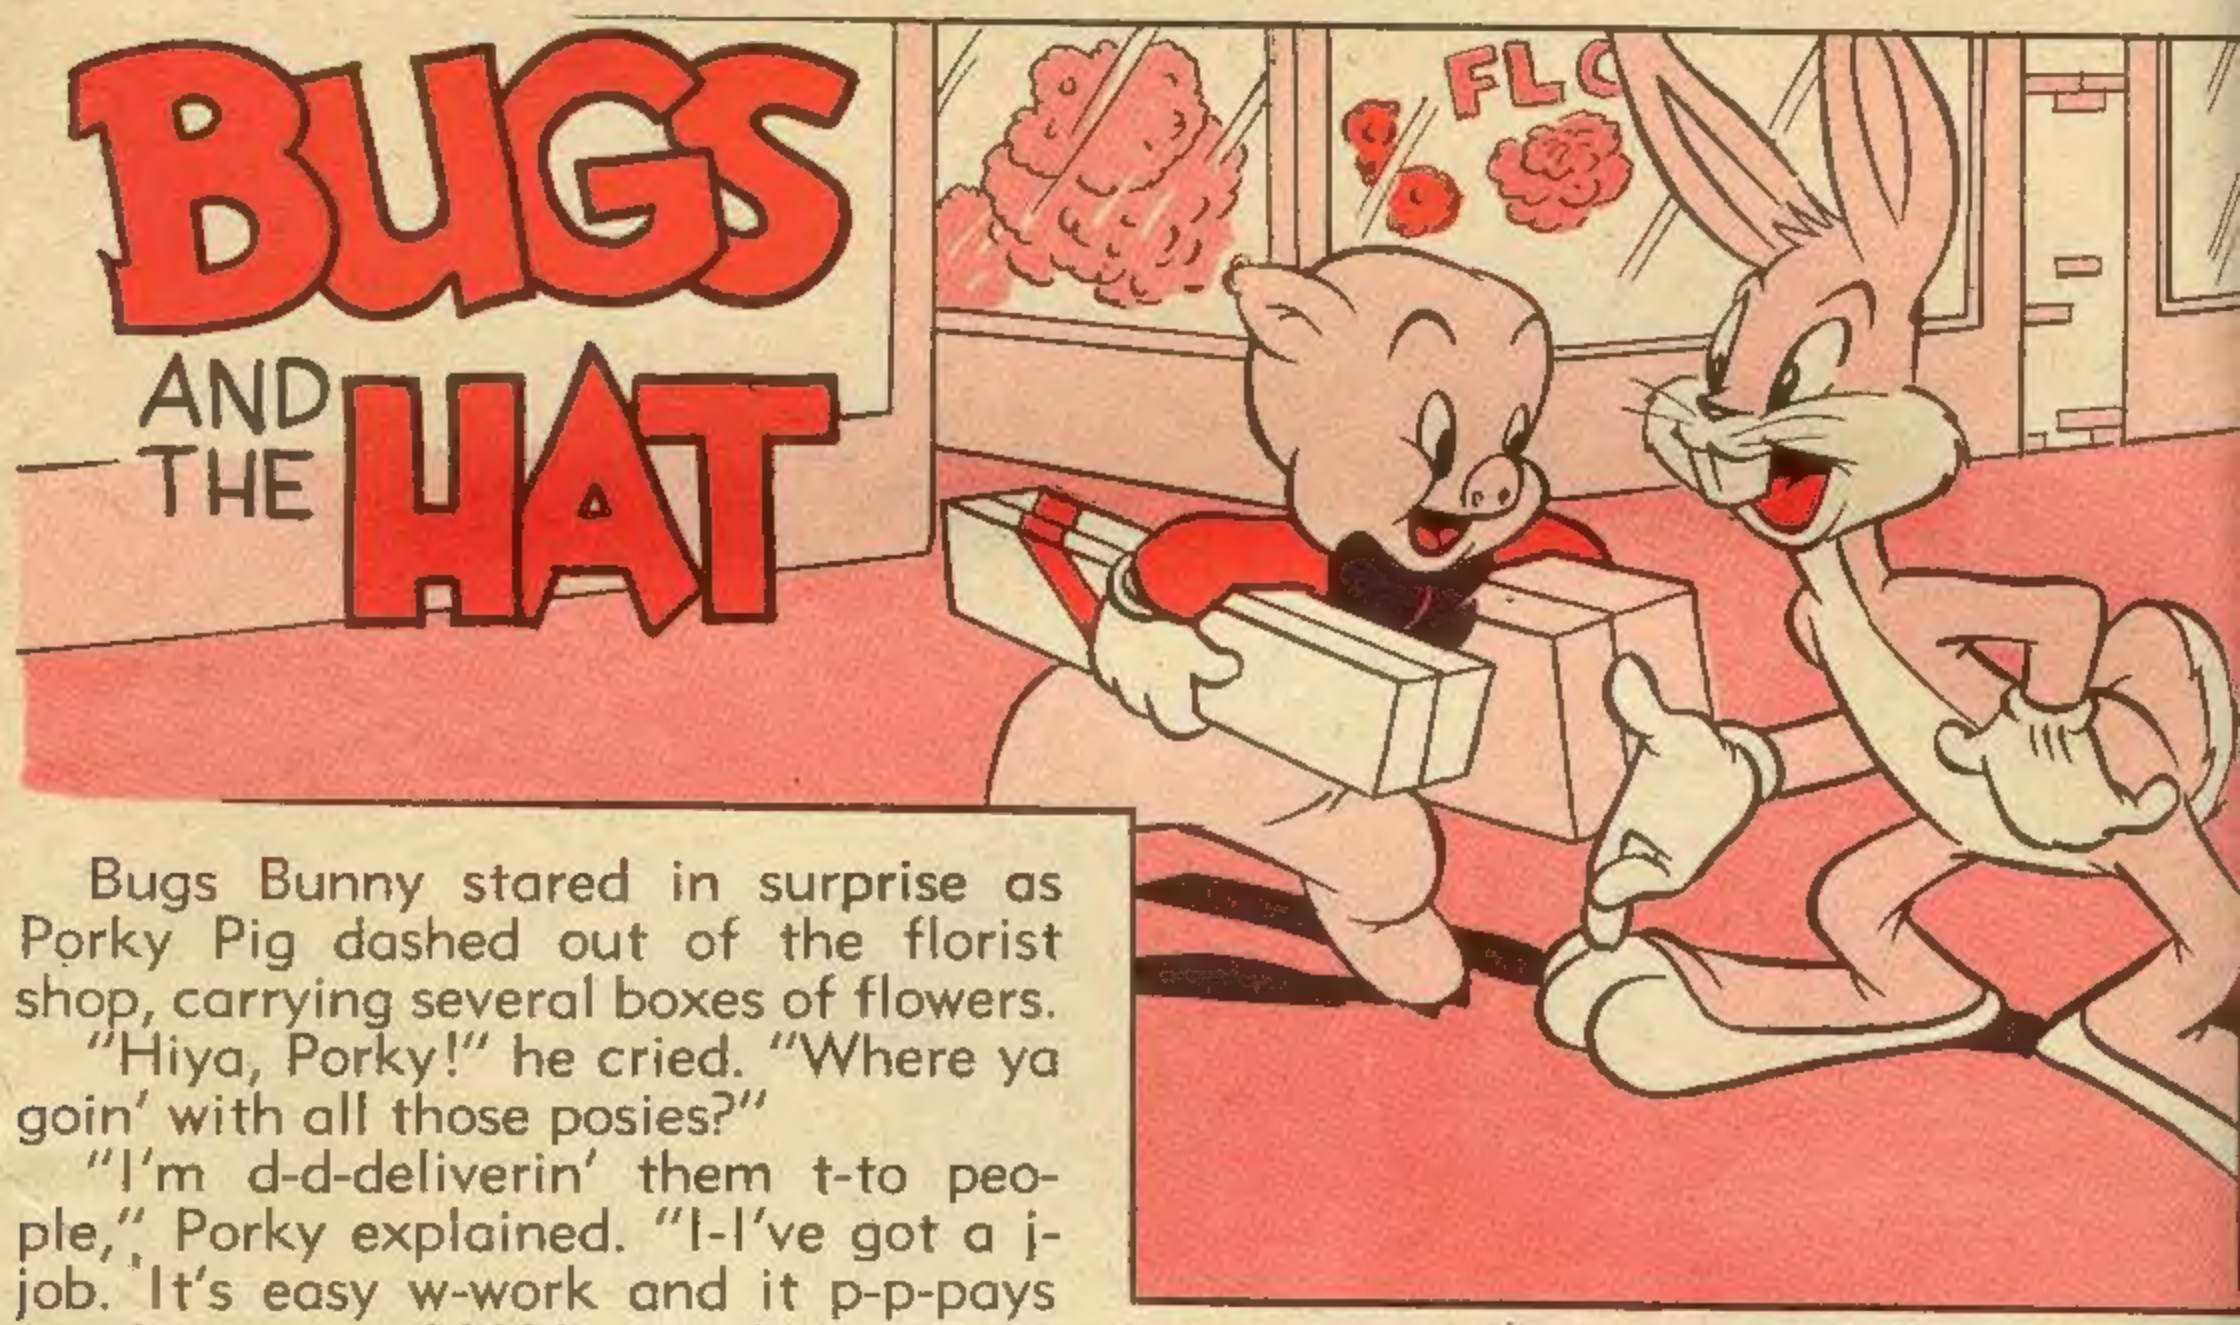
BUGS AND THE HAT



Bugs Bunny stared in surprise as Porky Pig dashed out of the florist shop, carrying several boxes of flowers.

"Hiya, Porky!" he cried. "Where ya goin' with all those posies?"

"I'm d-d-deliverin' them t-to people," Porky explained. "I-I've got a j-job. It's easy w-work and it p-p-pays good m-money! Y-You oughta g-g-get one I-like it, B-Bugs, and earn enough t-t-to go to c-camp this summer!"

"I ain't no truck," Bugs scoffed.

"O-Okay, but I'm s-s-savin' money so I c-can have a s-swell vacation," Porky replied cheerfully. "You'll be s-sorry when w-we all g-go to camp. S-S'long!"

Bugs sauntered down the sidewalk. But he didn't see the busy street or the hurrying people. He saw the camp with its cool swimming pool and shady trees and soft green grass.

Then, through a haze, he saw the sign. It was a small, neat card, surrounded by hats in the window of Madame Rabbette's Millinery Shop. It read: "Delivery Boy Wanted—Good Pay for Right Boy!"

"Hmmmm!" Bugs muttered. "Carryin' them little hats around oughta be easy work. Guess I'll try it."

Madame Rabbette, herself, met him as he walked in the door.

"I'm the right rabbit for that job," Bugs grinned, pointing to the card in the window. "I'm strong, husky, honest an' reliable. I'm—"

"Fine," Madame Rabbette interrupted. "You're hired and you can start work now. We have a hat to be delivered immediately."

"Do you call that thing a hat?" Bugs asked in amazement, as Madame Rabbette picked up a funny-looking bunch of ribbons, flowers, and feathers and tucked it gently in a box.

"I certainly do," she replied indignantly. "It's one of our most exclusive and expensive creations. We designed it especially as a surprise for Miss Phyllis Pig of Park Drive. She will be so happy when she sees it."

She placed the box in Bugs's hands.

"Take good care of it. I'll pay you a dollar when you return. Be very careful, for it's worth a small fortune. If anything happens to the hat, you'll have to pay for it."

Bugs sauntered down the street with the box. This was sure an easy job. Maybe he could deliver two or three or four hats this same day. And earn two or three or four dollars. In just a little while he'd have enough money to go to the camp.

SUDSIE WUDSIE BATH SOAP -IT SINKS- MAMMOTH SIZE

Again he forgot the street. He saw only the camp. He was jumping off the spring board into the deep, cool water, when he hit something with a terrific bump.

The hat box flew out of his hand and a loud voice shouted, "Watch where you're goin', Bub! You almost knocked me down!"

Bugs came back with a start to the street and the angry fat rabbit facing him.

"I'm sorry," Bugs began. Then he uttered a loud yell, "MY HAT!"

He saw the box lying in the street. He darted toward it. But, before he could reach it, a truck rumbled over it and went on its way.

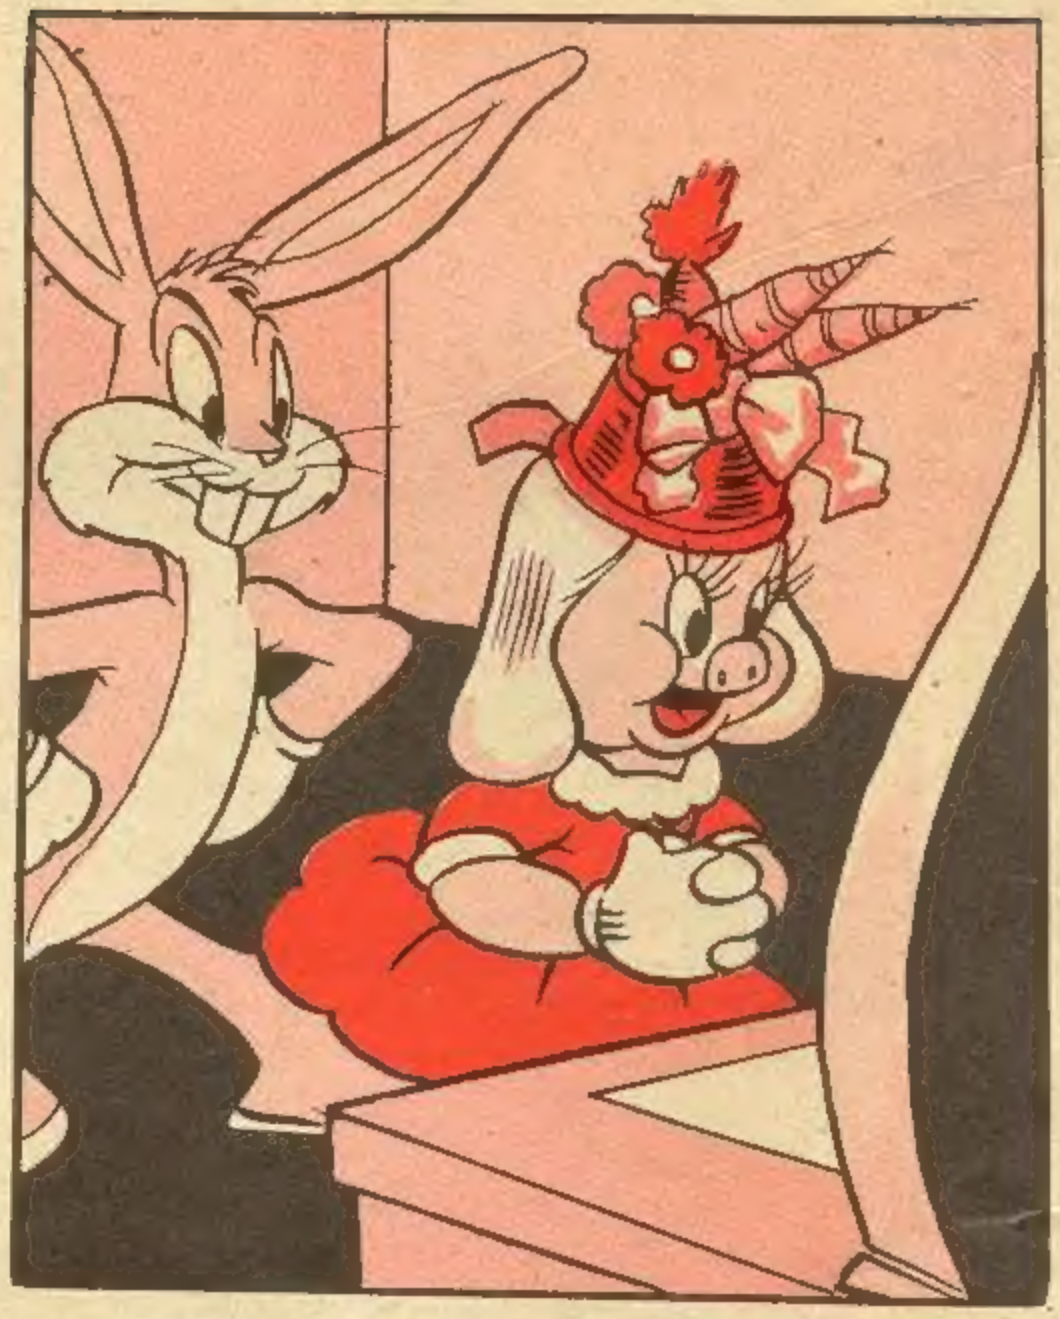
"Ohhh!" Bugs groaned and picked up the crushed mass of cardboard, ribbons, flowers, and feathers.

He sat on the curb and tried to straighten it. But it was beyond straightening.

Suddenly Bugs jumped up and snapped his fingers.

"I'll make her another one!" he murmured. "It don't take much brains t' fix a hat like that."

He found an old sieve in a trash barrel. Into the sieve he stuck two carrots and a radish from Elmer Fudd's garden, some flowers from Porky's yard, a few feathers from Beaky Buzzard's chicken coop, and a ribbon from Petunia Pig's clothesline.



Anxiously he surveyed the results. "It looks better than the first one," he decided finally.

Then he wrapped it in tissue paper and started for Park Drive. His heart was beating fast and he was trembling all over. Suppose she didn't like it? Suppose she refused to take it?? Suppose . . ???

Phyllis Pig opened the door when Bugs finally gathered enough courage to ring the bell.

"Your hat from Madame Rabbette's Shop!" Bugs choked.

Phyllis tore off the wrappings. Bugs closed his eyes and waited. He scarcely breathed.

"Ohhh!" Phyllis exclaimed. "It's the cutest hat I ever saw! There isn't another one like it in town! Tell Madame Rabbette that it's the most bee-yootiful hat she's ever made."

Bugs was dizzy with relief as he turned back toward the shop. Once again the camp floated before his eyes.

"I'll tell Madame Rabbette she liked the hat, but I won't tell her it was a hat made by Bugs Bunny," he chuckled happily.
